Do you know what a Cross Connection looks like in your home?

A cross connection is an arrangement of piping that could allow undesirable water, sewage, or chemical solutions to enter your drinking water system as a result of backflow. Historically, cross connections have been one of the most serious public health threats to drinking water supplies.

Some of the most common areas of water use in the home that pose a threat due to cross connections are:

- A hose connected to a chemical solution – lawn sprays herbicides, pesticides, and fertilizers
- Lawn irrigation systems
- Chemically treated heating systems
- Water softeners
- Hose connections to laundry tubs or water outlets
- Swimming pools & hot tubs

In many instances, the installation of a hose bib vacuum breaker can prevent back siphonage of containments and provide adequate protection of the home owners water supply and consequently the utility's water system. This means equipping each hose connection inside and outside of your home with a simple and inexpensive vacuum breaker. These items can be purchased at a local hardware store or even Amazon.
